Introduction:
The franchise company may offer to provide management services to franchisees. Marriott International, Inc., for example, manages about 50 percent of all hotels that carry the Marriott flag under 20-year contracts. Independent management companies manage the remaining hotels under long-term management contracts of up to ten years’ duration, often with several five-year renewal options. According to Dr. James Canton, “As one of the strongest drivers for change in the event industry, technology plays a prominent role in the planning and management of events. A report on the Hotels of the Future involved working with a leading think tank and members, how future trends will impact on hotels by 2060”. In the past couple of decades, festival and event tourism has been one of the fastest growing sections of the world leisure industry (Getz, 1991; Nicholson & Pearce, 2001) and has received increasing attention by academic researchers. In addition to commonly targeted topics such as economic impact, marketing strategies of mega-events, and festival management (Getz, 1999; Gnoth & Anwar, 2000; Ralston & Hamilton, 1992; Ritchie, 1984), there is a growing stream of research focusing on the motivations of attendees. It is hard to give a single universal definition for a luxury hotel for the simple reason that it is even harder to first explain what exactly is entailed in the word luxury (Danziger, 2005).

Literature Review:

When looking at tourism it’s important to consider the term hospitality. Some define hospitality as “the business of helping people to feel welcome and relaxed and to enjoy themselves” (Discover Hospitality, 2015, ¶ 3). Simply put, the hospitality industry is the combination of the accommodation and food and beverage groupings, collectively making up the largest segment of the industry. Luxurious experiences are largely interconnected with each person’s hopes and dreams, which, as described in utterly fancy terms by some scholars, are tied to individuals striving to reach self-actualization and self-fulfillment through greater knowledge, appreciation of beauty, spiritual sophistication, peace, art, culture and aesthetics (Michman & Mazze, 2006). This makes “luxury” a highly subjective notion since people are different regarding ethnical belonging, culture of origin, educational background and personal experience (Becker, 2009). One person’s luxury can be another person’s necessary, vice versa. Nevertheless, the lexical abstractness did not stop researchers from trying to understand it and many have talked about their study results about luxury ideals in published articles, each having a unique angel (Talbott, 2004). Danziger (2005) categorized luxury into four dimensions that place luxury ideals into perspective, that is, “luxury as a brand”, “luxury as luxe product features”, “luxury as non-necessities”, and “luxury as the power to pursue your passions”. Obviously, luxury hotels, as substantial existence of certain established luxury brands, fall into the “luxury as a brand” category, which is about individuals consuming luxury products and services because they are perceived as a symbol of luxury and the best quality (Danziger, 2005). According to John Wiley and Sons Hotel Management and Operations “The OPM develops and manages the preopening budget. This budget typically consists of three major categories; labor cost (40 percent), sales and marketing efforts (40 percent), and miscellaneous (20 percent).” Moreover, Sales and marketing activities comprise advertising, collateral, public relation and travel to see clients. According to Minghetti, Valeria on Building customer value in the hospitality industry towards the definition of a customer centric information system Source: Information Technology & Tourism, Volume 6, Number 2, 2003, pp. 141-152(12) Increasing occupancy rates and revenue by improving customer experience is the aim of modern hospitality organizations. To achieve these results, hotel managers need to have a deep knowledge of customers' needs, behavior, and preferences and be aware of the ways in which the services delivered create value for the customers and then stimulate their retention and loyalty. In this article a methodological framework to analyze the guest–hotel relationship and to profile hotel guests is discussed, focusing on the process of designing a customer information system and particularly the guest information matrix on which the system database will be built. Also, Breffini M Noone 1 April 2003, said that A number of authors have advocated a move towards integrating customer relationship management (CRM) and revenue management (RM). The implications of integrating CRM and RM strategies in the context of the hotel environment, however, have received little attention. The key questions that need to be addressed are: who should be targeted with CRM efforts and how will those efforts affect the RM process? This paper examines the relationship between CRM and RM. By means of the lifetime/profitability approach to customer segmentation proposed by Reinartz and Kumar in 2002, the appropriate customer segments to target with CRM efforts are identified and a supporting RM strategy is outlined for each segment. These include traditional RM, lifetime value-based pricing, availability guarantees and short-term and ad hoc promotions. The impact of these RM strategies on business processes in relation to customer segmentation, demand forecasting, information systems management and human resource management is addressed.

Analysis
Analysis:

After three months of research, I came to know that The Westin Dhaka follows very strict rules on providing their information. They do not want to share their financial status with an intern. Their process of work is very hard all the associates work very hard to make The Westin Dhaka no. 1 hotel in Bangladesh. The Sales Department is a very important department of the hotel because all the revenues of the hotel come from this department. The sales team always follows ISAC software to manage any event even a short meeting because it’s linked to the Marriott International. All the Marriott hotels catering team follows this ISAC. Sales team is the only team which is directly connected to the customers. They always try to make happy to the clients.
