

The Daily Star

Thursday, January 30, 2014

Path to a Model Nation

We hear a lot about how the youth of the nation isn't up to the task of leading us out of the grinding realities of poverty and the stigma of still being a developing country. It's easy to become pessimistic about the future when you hear horror stories of drugs and murder, but there are other stories as well. This month, BRAC University Global Model United Nations (BUGMUN) proved that leadership and imagination are not lacking in today's youth. Read on, and have hope.

With the advent of the internet, access to skill development has never been easier. Head to Page 5 for SHOUT's list of the top online course programmes if you're looking to learn something new.

Sick and tired of overhyped writers getting all the press, and your favourite books going past unnoticed? Our newest recruit gives you his honest opinion of one such 'acclaimed' writer. Chuckle in agreement or fume with indignation, whatever your reaction let us know how you feel about it and today's issue on our Facebook page.

– Zoheb Mashlur, Sub-editor, SHOUT