

This report presents an optical character recognition approach for Bangla (national language of Bangladesh) offline printed characters. Sample training data, scanned using a modest scanner, is first translated as gray-scale pixel representation. Pre-processing steps that follows are skew angle detection and correction, noise removal, line, word and character separation. The separated characters are then fed into a two layer feed forward Neural Network for training. Finally this network is used to recognize printed Bangla scripts.