BRAC University holds first-year advising program

BRAC University continues with its exciting first-year advising program for the Spring 2015 batch of entering students, a press release said Sunday.

As a part of the Freshman Orientation program, new students met with their First Year Advising Team (FYAT) during the FYAT Day on 17th January, 2015.

Each First-Year Advising Team (FYAT) comprise faculty adviser and peer mentor who provide individual and group advising to support new students, monitor their academic needs and performance, and guide academic planning during their first year at BRAC University.

The fun-filled day, entirely run by student volunteers from all departments, commenced with a brief address by Professor Riaz Partha Khan, Dean of Student Affairs, on the first year experience, academic expectations, and campus learning and advising resources at BRAC University. This was followed by video and student presentations on student services and campus resources.

The program ended with a raucous program of freshman student groups presenting their singing, dancing, poetry recitation and other talents on stage.
